Guidelines for Using Speed Drills with Young Children

- These drills will help children increase the speed and accuracy with which they recognize the letters of the alphabet. Fluency and automaticity for accurate letter naming can only be addressed once the child has had GOOD instruction forming memory for the grapheme (visual image of the letter shape) and letter name.
- Introduce the letters in the same order used by your Reading Program. Lacking a Core Program, use: a, m, s, t, b, c, f, h, o, n, p, r, g, i, d, j, k, l, v, u, q, z, w, x, e, y
- When teaching about letters, teach that letters have NAMES and SOUNDS. For very young children, start with a picture page of animals and teach the difference between the NAME of something and the SOUND it makes.

Start at the very beginning. . . letters have names, they make sounds, those sounds make up words that we can read!

For children who do not know this very basic, foundational information, ask them to name each animal and tell the sound it makes. Ask, "Is this a moo?" while pointing to the cow. "That's right, it's a cow, the name is cow, and the sound it makes is Moo." or "No, this animal says moo, but its name is cow."

Do this with every animal pictured and then say "Let's play a game! I'll point to an animal and say "name" or "sound." If I say "sound," you tell me the sound that animal makes. If I say "name," you tell me the name of it." Give feedback each time, "That's right!" "No, that's the sound, try again" or "Wow, you said that one FAST!"

Advanced

Repeat the game, increasing speed as you go so that the student response time gets faster and faster. Once quite successful, but not necessarily perfect, move on to letter name/sound instruction.

"These are letters of the alphabet. Each one has a name and at least one sound that it makes. We're going to learn the name and a sound for each one."

Look at this word. It's your name! The letters make sounds, which make all the sounds in your name!
