

AP Micro/Macro Economics

AP Microeconomics is the study of Economic principles concerning individual decision makers, the consumers and producers, within an economy. The main areas of concentration include basic economic and microeconomic concepts, the nature and functions of product and factor markets, and market failure and the role of government. It is a yearlong course, and in the fall semester we will cover in greater depth and with greater rigor the same general concepts and principles that are covered in the regular economics class. Both the Milestone and the AP test will be administered in May.
